

Stamford Civic Society – Conserving the Past, Shaping the Future

St Mary's Church and
Stamford Town Hall

Stamford is an outstanding stone town built on the Jurassic rock outcrop which stretches from Dorset to Yorkshire. It has fine examples of period architecture, ranging from remnants of medieval monasteries to 19th century stone houses.

Stamford Civic Society was formed by a small group of dedicated enthusiasts in the early 1960s who set about defending the town's heritage and actively fighting for its preservation. In 1967 Stamford became the first Urban Conservation Area. A major book by the Royal Commission followed, detailing the long architectural history of the town and confirming the vitality of its unique built environment.

Today the Society works to conserve and enhance the built and social fabric of the town, and to inform people about Stamford's fascinating history. It is also keen to foster good design for the future and supports innovative and environmentally-friendly developments. Its Committee keeps closely in touch with local issues and actively influences the planning process.

We welcome the support of people who would like to contribute and help the Society continue its important work.

Orlando Rock, of Burghley House, the Society's President, is a great supporter and writes "I am immensely proud of Burghley's close association with the Stamford Civic Society since it was founded in 1962. I cannot emphasise strongly enough the invaluable work the Society and its members undertake to ensure that Stamford remains the vibrant historic town that we all know and love. This requires remarkable commitment and determination – and it is wonderful to welcome new members to this very deserving cause."

By becoming a member of Stamford Civic Society you will be able to:

- Strengthen the influence of the Society in its work to conserve and enhance our town
- Provide ideas on the projects we should tackle – our website provides a fast means of letting the Committee know of any pressing issues
- Offer any special knowledge or skills to help the Society achieve its aims
- Enjoy members-only events, which include visits and talks
- Receive a regular newsletter which includes information about the work of the Society and the people and places that make Stamford special
- Help celebrate well-designed renovation projects

Your membership fee enables the Society to continue its work and take on new projects which help to conserve and enhance the town.
